The struggle continues - unsurprisingly the South African and East Timorese governments have become staunch supporters of the Saharawi struggle for self-determination. They know how long the road to freedom can be - the best of them know they haven't got to the end of that road vet!

They also know what helped them further along that road. It was not individuals who won the struggle, however important a figurehead they became. It was people standing together and not letting decades of disappointment lessen their thirst for justice. It was the bravery of all the South Africans who stood in unity against apartheid that defeated that injustice. And the Saharawi continue to show immense bravery in the face of brutal repression.

Our contribution in the UK is small in comparison to their struggle but we continue to play a leading role in the international campaign. We were instrumental in setting up Western Sahara Resource Watch, in running the international campaign for human rights monitoring (this year with the very welcome support of Unison) and in making sure the UK Government continues to advocate the application of international law even if they are not quite ready to forget diplomatic niceties and do what they know is right and vote for freedom

I thank you for your support and would urge you to continue to do what you can to support the Saharawi in their fight for self-determination.

The cause is just and the Saharawi will win.
